Plenary Session- I

Timing: 11.30 am - 12.30 pm

Chairperson: Prof. Rama Shankar Dubey

Resource Person: Prof. B.K Tripathi

Theme: “Relevance of the vision of Mahamana in the context of Modern Education”

The session started by the chairperson of the plenary session Prof. Rama Shankar Dubey, Vice-Chancellor, Central University of Gujarat by reflecting upon the magnificent personality of Mahamana Pandit Madan Mohan Malviya and his relevance in the current society and education system. He discussed some of the significant incidences from Indian history and the contribution of Pandit Madan Mohan Malviya which is not known widely.

After giving a glimpse of some of the principles and contributions of Mahamana he handed over the session to the resource person for the plenary session- I, Prof. B.K Tripathi, Director of IUCTE, BHU. The resource person started the session by signifying the role of Mahamana not only in the Indian context but also in the global context. He quoted Mahatma Gandhi who once said, “Mere Charitra par Daag ho Sakta hai par Pandit Ji Ke Charitra par Nahi”. Such charismatic was the personality of Mahamana. Mahamana always emphasized on the overall development of any individual. His vision was based on humanitarian ground. In 1904, he chose education to impart the lesson of humanity and with this purpose, he proposed for the establishment of Banaras Hindu University in 1905. He practiced law and journalism. He was also the chairman of the Hindustan Times from 1924 to 1936. He studied all ancient Scriptures, Vedas and Upanishads and therefore for him Hinduism was not just a sect but a way of life. The resource person then talked about the vision of Mahamana in the field of Education. He mentioned about Pandit Madan Mohan Malviya National Mission on Teachers and Teaching, a scheme of Central government inaugurated in 2014 to bring reforms in the area of teaching. He said that the idea of peer learning and creative learning which is considered to be a shift from behaviorism to constructivism theory is so much in demand today but Mahamana in 1916 only propagated such constructive ideas. Also, the parameters of quality education, learning outcome, and interdisciplinarity of the subject are also some of the widely discussed topics in today’s education system which was also talked by Mahamana long time back. He favored education of any subject with values along with the study of ancient Indian knowledge and cultural heritage. Therefore, currently, work is going on to interpret and understand the vision of Mahamana in the education system which would be based purely on the authentic sources available. The resource person then ended his talk by saying that as students, teachers, and educationists, we all should relook and reflect the ideas of Mahamana in the current educational scenario.

The chairperson concluded the session by sharing two incidences regarding the commitment of Mahamana towards ensuring a good quality of teachers in the institutions. In the year 1931, he got impressed with the knowledge of a young professor of mathematics in England and asked him to join BHU as head of the department in mathematics where he ensured him to provide autonomy for implementing new ideas in his subject. Another was the recruitment Ranganathan, as head of the Library-science department. These two incidences showed that Mahamana never wanted to compromise with the quality of the teacher in his institutions. In the end, the chairperson concluded the session by saying that the need of the time is that education for students should include a humanitarian value that would help in the process of nation-building.

The first plenary session concluded with a vote of thanks by Dr. Shamim Aara Hussain, Assistant Professor, School of Education, Central University of Gujarat.

Plenary Session 2

Timing: 12.30 -1.30 pm

Chairperson: Prof. Rama Shankar Dubey

Resource Person: Prof. Harikesh Singh

Theme: “Pandit Madan Mohan Malviya’s Axiological Paradigm for Value Education”

The session started with the chairperson inviting the resource person for the second plenary session Prof. Harikesh Singh, honorable Vice-Chancellor, Jai Prakash University, Chhapra, Bihar. The resource person began the session by saying that education itself has inherited in the value system. When our gross enrolment ratio is increasing then what can be the reason leading towards the lack of apathy among individuals. Why are we struggling to achieve the synthesis between quantity and quality? This is because though we are getting educated but we are not able to dissolve our ego. The first quality that an individual should achieve after becoming educated is the dissolution of the ego.

In an affluent society, the individual is facing the problem of isolation, impatience, and excess of aspiration. We are forgetting our roots. So rather than becoming a conscious being as told by Aurobindo Ghosh, we are getting driven by our selfish need. The resource person expressed his concern about the current education system with the quote of Rabindranath Tagore, “we are busy in decorating cage but the bird inside is thirsty”. That means rather than helping a child to attain the knowledge we are busy working on other aspects in the field of education. This leads to the commodification of education in the current society where individuals even after becoming doctor or engineering are not doing their job with honesty and integrity. He also talked about the objective of education as defined in the report by UNESCO in 1970 titled “Learning to be” and of 1996 titled “Learning the treasure within”. The aim of education should be to attain knowledge of higher-order (Pragya). We should go for perennial knowledge rather than attaining a temporal one. Therefore, there is a need to adopt a holistic perspective where we can move towards the idea of “we the people”.

The resource person moving his discussion further said that education is the process of optimization of innate capabilities. It is also the process of socialization and humanization. There is a need for invoking consciousness among individuals regarding what is right and what is wrong. The inculcation of value would happen only when an individual would face an adverse situation and calamity, only then they would work towards its eradication and help masses who are the most underprivileged in the society. Therefore, when the current education system failed to inculcate values among individual then we started looking at education and values separately which is a contradiction.

After creating marginalization in society, these days we are talking about inclusiveness. Therefore, there is a need to aim for holistic education and human dignity. The resource person ended the discussion by emphasizing the role of teachers who can help any individual to become a conscious citizen. He ended his talk by saying the famous lines, “ when a teacher runs, student walk, when a teacher walks, student crawl, when a teacher crawls, student stand, when a teacher stands, students sit, when a teacher sits, student sleep and when a teacher sleeps, students die”.

The second plenary session ended with the chairperson expressed his gratitude towards the resource person by highlighting the last and significant point that emphasized on the role of teachers. He said that the practice of teachers should be based on moral conduct as teachers prepare students to achieve their capabilities according to their values. The values of Sanatana culture aims towards the nation-building that should be inherited in our current education by studying our ancient text, scriptures, heritage, etc. The second plenary session ended with a vote of thanks by Dr. J. N Amin, Associate Professor, School of Education, Central University of Gujarat.
